POETRY

THE WIND.

A servant of the Lord, I wait, Attentive to His will, At His behest I range the plain, The valley and the bill. I stir the ocean, in its sleep,
I churn the curding foan,
And lift the billows from the deep,
And bear the wild bird home.

l pluck the old man by the heard.

I sing through forests old and dank And whisper in the ear Of crouching marmots, in their sleet, And start the tim rous deer. make a music midst the leaves,

A music soft and jow: And fill the air with minstrelsy, As when the pipers blow. —John S. Vaughan, in London Saturda; Review
